Libran Note: Alternative cover edition for ISBN... Deep at night, a woman waits in fear for her boyfriend to come home. Her two teenage children cringe in a locked bedroom. When the man shows up, drunk and raging, he hits the woman, then passes out. Her children find her bleeding and unresponsive. A gunshot rings out. This chilling episode begins John Grisham's 35th novel, Time for Mercy. This is a good example of his honed skills to connect readers directly to the story - a skill that has helped sell more than 300 million copies of his books worldwide. Most of his best-selling novels are fascinating legal thrillers, centered on courtroom drama and even more about the plots that take place behind what the jury and observers see in court. Grisham was a lawyer himself before finding success as a writer, and his experiences bring deep authenticity to his books. His first novel, Time to Kill, which was published in 1988 and became a hit in 1996, grew directly from his field of law in a small Mississippi town. The hero of her lawyer, Jake Briggins, took on an allegedly invincible case boiling over racial issues that split the fictional small town of Clinton, Miss., and nearly cost him his life. Grisham wrote Sycamore Row, a sequel to Kill Time, in 2013, and he brought Jake back for a third act on A Time for Mercy. This book takes place in 1990, just five years after killing time events, and Jake is still fighting over cases in Clinton. His highest hopes for a solid salary rest in the lawsuit he is pursuing relate to a collision between a car and a train that left a family of four dead. Jake is suing on behalf of the baby daughter who wasn't in the car that night. His witnesses say the transit ingring didn't work. Then his old friend and mentor Judge Omar Noss (whose name sounds like he came out of a Dickens novel) hands him another one of those invincible, and probably completely unprofitable, cases. The gunshot on the night killed Stuart Cooper, county sheriff's deputy. Cooper's girlfriend's 16-year-old son is charged with murder. Drew Gamble shot Cooper with the lieutenant's gun. There is no doubt about that; Drew admitted this, first to his 14-year-old sister, Kira, as she sat on the kitchen floor craming their mother, then to the police when they arrived in response to the children's 911 call. The question is why. Drew and Keira say they thought their mother, Josie, was dead. Cooper hurt them before, and they feared for their lives. The house was far from the city, with no help nearby. Josie, as it turns out, is alive, even though she was seriously injured. With Cooper dead and her mother hospitalized, Kira is homeless. The Gambles have struggled for years with Josie's poverty and drugs. And there are no relatives to take Kira. Cooper's family is so outraged by his death that they burn down all the Gambles' possessions and forbade them from returning home. And Drew's in a prison cell. In Mississippi in 1990, a 16-year-old boy can be tried as an adult. And thanks to a recent change in the law, the murder of a law enforcement officer, whether on duty or not, is a serious crime. Drew can go to death row. He knows full well that the case will provoke strong emotions, and his business depends on his community — as does the happiness of his wife, Carla, and their young daughter Hannah. But a loop is relentless. No other local lawyer has argued for a capital case; Jake's got the job, like it or not. The blue line was created immediately. City police see Stu Cooper as one of their own and make it clear to Jake that they expect to see his killer get the death penalty. This opinion is also held when it turns out that many of Cooper's friends in the police force knew that he was a violent drunk who had been drinking escalated. Some of them answered domestic violence calls to his house, only for Josie to refuse to press charges. This is not unusual in situations like this; What's suspicious is that all the records of these conversations are gone. Sheriff Ozzy Wall is furious to learn he's been removed from Cooper's downturn. He feels a little sympathy for Drew, but as the county's first black sheriff, he walks a tightrope every day. It takes all of Jake's compelling and legal skills just to get Drew examined by psychiatrists - which starts with angry rumors that Jake will present an insanity defense. Jake deals with the winding complications of Drew's case and tries to help Josie and Keira, he also faces his own troubles, especially with an alarming amount of debt. Much of it is litigation loans taken out in pursuit of the train case; When it gets stuck, Jake is on the hook for a lot more money than he has. Drew's defense costs are also rising, and the severe limit on what the state will pay a superior defense attorney is a total of $1,000. Jake needs mercy himself. Time to kill And Sycamore Rowe revolves around racial issues. In time for mercy, Grisham does not concentrate racism; The gambles and the Coopers are white. In a small southern town, however, racism is in the air that people breathe. Ozzy may be the county's most respected sheriff, but most everyday life, from barbecues on Saturdays to cemeteries, is strictly segregated. But not everyone in Clinton is full of hate, and Erishem also shows readers the kind side of the small town. Josie and Keira are taken wholeheartedly by members of a tiny rural church, who draw their slim resources to give the mother and daughter a place to stay. As always in Grisham's novels, the complexity of the legal strategy lies clearly, the good, the bad and the ugly. At work as well as in his personal life, Jake is That hero is just not perfect. He makes mistakes, sometimes big; He cuts corners and keeps secrets and sometimes slips to the edge of ethics. But he learns from all this, and when it comes to crisis, he does the right thing. Long before his name became synonymous with the modern legal thriller, he worked 60-70 hours a week in Little South Ivan, Mississippi, legal practice, squeezing through time before going to the office and during court breaks to work on his hobby - writing his first novel. Born On February 8, 1955, in Jonesboro, Arkansas, to construction worker and housewife John Grisham as a child, he dreamed of becoming a professional baseball player. When he realized he didn't have the right things for a professional career, he shifted gears and specialized in accounting at the University of Mississippi. After graduating from law school at Ola Miss in 1981, he continued to practice law for nearly a decade in Southampton, specializing in criminal protection and personal injury litigation. In 1983, he was elected to the state House of Representatives and served until 1990.One day in de Soto County Courthouse, Grisham heard the horrific testimony of a 12-year-old rape victim and was inspired to start an affair to investigate what would have happened if the girl's father had killed her attackers. Grisham got up at 5am .m every day to get into a few hours of writing time before leaving for work, spent three years at A Time to Kill and finished it in 1987. Initially rejected by many mammals, it was eventually purchased by Wynwood Press, who gave it a modest 5,000 print copy and published it in June 1988.It may have put an end to Grisham's hobby. However, he has already begun his next book, and it will quickly turn this hobby into a new full-time career - sparking one of the publishing's greatest success stories. The day after Gresham completed time to kill, he began working on another novel, the story of a young, senior lawyer who lured him to a seemingly perfect law firm that wasn't what it seemed. When he sold the film rights to Paramount Pictures for $600,000, Grisham suddenly became a hot property among the mussels, and the book rights were bought by Doubleday. Spent 47 weeks on the New York Times bestseller list, the firm became the bestselling novel of 1991.The successes of Pelican Synopsis, which reached number one on the New York Times bestseller list, and the client, who debuted in first place, confirmed Grisham's reputation as master of the legal thriller. Grisham's success even renewed the matter in time to kill, re-published in early childhood by Doubleday and then in. By Dell. This time, it was a bestseller. Since the first A Time to Kill was published in 1988, Grisham wrote at least one book a year (his other works are the office, the pelican synopsis, the client, time to kill, the rainmaker, the room, the painted house, the fugitive jury, the partner, the street lawyer, the ally, the brothers, the painted house, skipping Christmas, the subpoena, the tort king, the benches, the last juror, the broker playing for pizza, the appeal, the colleague, the confession, the litigators, Calico Joe, the blackmailer, the blackmailer, the Sikmore row. A rogue lawyer, whistler, cameino island, rooster bar, account and guards) and they've all become international bestsellers. Today there are more than 350 million John Grisham books in print worldwide, translated into 45 languages. Nine of his romanians became films (the company, the pelican synopsis, the client, time to kill, the rainmaker, the room, the painted house, the fugitive jury and the skip of Christmas), as well as an original script, The Ginger Man. The Innocent Man (October 2006) marked his first foresthes of nonfiction literature, and Ford County (November 2009) was his first collection of short stories. In addition, Grisham wrote seven novels for young people, all in the series Theodore Boone: Lawyer Kidd, The Kidnapping, The Accused, The Activist, Fugitive, Scandal, and Accomplice. He honored a commitment made before he retired from the law to become a full-time writer: representing the family of a train brake who was killed when he was pinned between two cars. Grisham prepared his case with the same passion and dedication as the protagonists of his books, successfully claiming his clients' claim, giving them a jury award of $683,500 - the biggest verdict of his career. When he's not writing, Grisham devotes time to charitable causes, including recently a coastal rebuilding fund that raised $8.8 million to help the Gulf Coast in the wake of Hurricane Katrina. He also keeps up with his greatest passion: baseball. The man who dreamed of becoming a professional baseball player now serves as the local league commissioner. The six ball courts he built on his property hosted more than 350 children in 26 Little League teams. Teams.
